The Sorghum (rop of 1867.

(From the Sorgo Joanna)

From most of the cane growing regio in the west the reports upon the condition of the crops are gloomy enough. In a few localities and smail precincts, he rand there, the elements seem to have been more propitious, and the cane appears in a fair condition, but these more favored places are few in number and limited in area, and in most of them the spring was unfavorable, as in other places, so that the quantity of cane planted was small and the stand poor. In the easter states the apring was, as with us, well cold and backward, deterring many from planting, and preventing the acet that was planted from making a good stand. Near the list of Amgust the Atlantic coast has been expessed to incessant rains, much like the swhich prevalled throughout the West at a corresponding period last year. These have kept the canes green and growing and have prevented them from maturinat the proper time, so that they must be barvested in an immature state, or led standing, as they will be in many case, untit overtaken by a freezing and destructive frost. This state of things is rather disheartening to those who have enlisted in the sorghum army, and it will doubtless cause a few timid souls to "so back" on the enterprise, and call it a locause. doubtless cause a few timid souls to "ko back" on the enterprise, and call it a los cause. But there is no fear that any great number will desert and leave the ranks. We have met with a reverse, and our forces are slightly demoralized, but we don't propose to aurrender; on the other hand, the little backset we have had will stimulate to greater preparation and more earnest efforts in the future. The road to great successes at ways leads through a Bull Run, and t is is the Bull Run crisis in our sorghum campsign. Its effect will be to test our interest in sorghum, give us a better appreciation of its vaine, and lead to more definite purposes and appropriate efforts in connection with it. The truth is, we have gone on from year to year, making over twenty, thirty and forty million gallons of sirup with so little trouble, and so little disturbance of the ordinary farm economy, that we do not realize the luagnitude or appreciate the importsnee of the business. If the production of sorghum sirup required two or three times as much ontiay and trouble as is generally bestowed upon it, we should estimate it much more nighly, and should estimate it much more nighly, and should nechably be less inclined to take.

For I same buy it is a wind of two important of the developer in the single of the continuation.

on discouragement at any temporary reverse.

It is probable that one effect of the comparative failure of the sorghum crop this year will be to sift out and relieve the business of a class of careless, half-hearted operators, who have always been a drawback to the business. The only way these men can advance the interests of sorghum is by abondoning it forever, and we shall rejoice heartily if they can be Induced to favor us with a little help in that way.
